My mother, father, and sister were visiting, and my brother who was married and living in Georgia and my niece who was five years old. The war had been going on for a year and six months. Our country was in the middle of a world war, I was 20 years old. I lay in bed listening to my radio, of course. It was a big hit of the day, as most of my radio was. I'm not sure how many of you know that "Chattanooga Choo Choo" was a song, but it was, and it was by the Coasters. It's fun to say it. I didn't know any different. That was the way the world was. It was a world war. Now, we lived in Dallas, Texas, in a very small city of about 20,000 people. It was pretty well-to-do. We had what they call the "good life." I had a two-room apartment in the basement of a Baptist church, and we had a piano and a phonograph. We had very nice clothes, and we had a car with a radio. I was very happy. There were little areas all over the world that were really suffering. As my family and I came home to our apartment, we saw the movie "They Died With Their Boots On" (1941) on the big movie screen in Dallas, and it showed the old-time churches with the stained-glass windows, the man of God in his black robes, and it showed these people in the old-time tuxedos, with their little white shirts and black bow tie. "They Died With Their Boots On" was telling the story of people in England who were part of the class system during the years of the great depression, and they, as a class, rose up against the people who made their lives so miserable that they would just take things out on them and be glad to do it. There was a great sacrifice on the part of the people, and they thought that they had a better way, and they had 2d92ce491b
