It appears that some values that are within the bounds of the function, but in a roundabout way that is not captured by the function, are being processed. For example, your dates 9/20/2020 (which should be processed as 2020-09-20, since that is what I would expect) is being treated as a month where the value 9 for the day is being treated as a year value of 1920. The same effect would occur for 2020-04-20 (which should be treated as 2020-04-19 and not parsed as 2020-04-20) and 10/7/2010 (which should be treated as 2010-10-07 and not parsed as 2010-10-10). Instead of using strtotime(), you should be using DateTime::createFromFormat(). The documentation is a little bit thin, but you should be able to supply it a string such as %Y-%m-%d like this: $dt = DateTime::createFromFormat('%Y-%m-%d', $date); This will handle many of the differences in both the date format and the possible text in the date that strtotime() can't handle. You also don't need to explicitly check for the success of DateTime::createFromFormat() - this will not return false when it fails to create a valid DateTime object. To the Editor: With the COVID-19 pandemic sweeping through the U.S., a 64-year-old woman in California named Heather Whittaker died after catching the virus. (The researcher quoted in the Wall Street Journal article has other details.) Ms. Whittaker was legally blind, lived in a nursing home, had a known cognitive impairment and had some other health issues, which played a role. But authorities don't appear to have announced whether she showed any symptoms before she got sick. She seemed to have caught the disease —
