They were purchased and moved over to FSX in an active forum thread on the AOPA site, as such files are no longer available. An archive of all the files that are available for download can be found here. The optical reflectance of a dental varnish containing a monolayer of TiO₂ on poly-DL-lactide. The optical properties of a nano-sized anatase-rutile TiO₂ monolayer that was deposited on the surface of a poly-DL-lactide (PDLLA) film were investigated by using the optical reflectance at normal incidence. The UV-vis spectra confirmed that the PDLLA film was a TiO₂ layer approximately 200 nm thick. As the number of TiO₂ particles was increased, the optical reflectance increased, and its dependence on the incident angle became weaker.

The optical reflectance of the TiO₂ monolayer on the PDLLA film at normal incidence increased to approximately 47% of the value of the TiO₂ monolayer on air when the number of TiO₂ particles was 100, and a minimum value was obtained at an incident angle of 53 degrees. ~~~ singingfish Not sure about the location, but the same thing

To be honest you can get a better handle on the look of a kit. Even with flight1's odd liveries and that old real life obsession with "silver" paint does it still truly look like real wood? Here's how to get it to really have a look the right way.. add a random runway texture that's also a plane But I am disappointed as to their. P3D is a poor choice for FSX.
