A lagoon is a natural or man-made fresh or saltwater area at the bottom of a body of water or sea where there is a closed water cycle. Lagoons form on the site of a formerly warm, shallow sea that once occupied part of the land. Lagoons are also created artificially by means of a dam and a reservoir, resulting in the formation of artificial lagoons (usually salty). Usually lagoons have no discharge into the sea or ocean and can exist for decades or even hundreds of years without significant change. However, the salinity of water in lagoons can change if the flow of water to the sea or ocean is blocked by a dam, which is often achieved in the case of a reservoir. On the other hand, as an example of natural formation, you can take a lagoon formed by an earthquake and subsequent tsunami. Lagoons are usually circular or oval in shape, and can be up to 100 kilometers in diameter. Examples of lagoons are the Truk Lagoon in Micronesia, the San Ignacio Lagoon in the United States, the Mara Lagoon in Ibiza, the Lagoon (Italian lago, lake) - area of sea, lake, river or other body of water connected to the land by straits or separated from the sea by an island Lagoon in the broad sense of the word is shallow closed reservoirs (lakes, ponds, reservoirs, etc.) without watersheds and limited by low parts of the relief lagoons.
