Dr. Bonnie Henry, provincial health officer, says five new cases were reported in the past 24 hours and one previously reported case is believed to be linked to a traveller from overseas. The new cases are: - A woman in her 50s who lives in the Fraser Valley and travelled to Hong Kong - A woman in her 60s who lives in Abbotsford and travelled to an international destination - A man in his 70s who lives in Kelowna and travelled to an international destination - A man in his 50s who lives in Burnaby and travelled to Japan - A man in his 70s who lives in Abbotsford and travelled to Australia. Henry says the COVID-19 outbreak remains focused in long-term care homes, while it continues to spread to the community. There are now 23 long-term care homes in the province that have confirmed cases of COVID-19. One long-term care home in Vancouver has reported to health officials that one of their residents has died from the illness. The number of long-term care homes with suspected cases of COVID-19 has risen to 21. Vancouver Coastal Health is reporting 18 of the suspected cases are from long-term care homes in the city. The number of confirmed cases in B.C. with no long-term care link is now 10. As of Friday, the number of deaths related to the COVID-19 outbreak functional diversity of the xenotropic murine leukemia virus receptor (XmvR) in murine plasmacytomas. The high incidence of xenotropic and polytropic murine leukemia viruses in mice appears to be related to the expression of the xenotropic virus receptor, XmvR. All of the myeloma cell lines that are capable of transforming with either of these viruses express XmvR. XmvR appears to be a single gene product, encoded by a transcription unit which also contains a putative myc gene. The structural organization of XmvR is not known. An early message (2.2 kb) of the XmvR gene was detected by Northern blot hybridization in resting mouse plasmacytomas. A second, slightly slower message (4.8 kb) was also detected. Translation of the 4.8-kb message initiated at a potential which overlapped with that of the 2.2-kb message. The deduced amino acid sequence of the two mRNAs differed at several positions and, interestingly, 4bc0debe42
