However, all known methods for powder coating steel tubular members involve the initial coating of the steel with an organic primer followed by the application of a powder coating over the primer layer using an electrostatic powder spray coating gun. Electrostatic powder spray guns are well known in the art and are typically fed with organic primers, metallic powders and mineral based powders. The organic primers are mixed with metallic particles and then the mixture is sprayed with an electrostatic spray gun. The powder coatings applied to the steel tubular members are typically non-porous, non-conductive, and have a uniform thickness of roughly 1000-2000 microns. The most widely used coating material for powder coating steel tubular members is iron. Iron powder is available in an environmentally safe semi-hydrophobic form that is suitable for electrostatic powder coating of steel. Iron powder is known to adhere well to steel, and is well accepted by the electrostatic powder spray coating industry. The semi-hydrophobic powder coating industry has repeatedly turned to the use of iron powder in order to minimize the use of volatile organic compounds (VOCs) during the powder coating process. Iron powder coatings have a good

Earlier this month, on the first Thursday of the month, the skies over Sydney were unusually dark and overcast. But a few hours earlier, they were unusually clear. The city normally experiences a higher concentration of atmospheric pollutants. A number of the city's major air quality monitoring stations have been recording some of the worst levels seen since 2012, as Sydney's pollution levels hit new highs earlier this month. A headwind over Sydney from the east, combined with the distant source of pollution the previous week, were a major factor, according to an Air Quality Australia spokesman. The blue line shows the AEA's ozone monitor, with values in parts per billion. The bureau says Sydney air quality has been at unhealthy levels for four weeks, making it the longest period of unhealthy ozone levels in the past decade. "We're seeing some of the worst ozone levels in history," said Mark McDonald, AEA's chief executive. "We've been quite lucky that we've not been hit by a major bushfire, but the number of major bushfires that have occurred is more than usual this time of year." The Bureau of Meteorology says air quality conditions will get worse in the next few days. Air quality is worse in
