Immigration, refugees, and other minority groups in the United States are often not viewed as "cultural" immigrants in the mainstream of American society but rather as "foreign" or "minority" immigrants. However, the multicultural diversity in the U.S. does not include immigrants who originate from another nation with a distinct culture, religion, and language. Thus, the interplay of language, culture, and religion in the lives of immigrant children can be an important outcome variable with possible implications for family functioning and the health of children. The current study assessed the interplay of language, culture, and religion on the mental health and health behaviors of immigrant children, particularly Muslim Bangladeshi immigrant children in the U.S. Two telephone surveys were conducted with 314 Muslim Bangladeshi immigrant parents and their U.S. born children, ages 5-13 years. The results revealed that the stressors of being a migrant family and cultural differences in the home environment were associated with higher mental health ratings, while language proficiency and acculturation were negatively associated with the mental health of migrant children. The lack of parental religious practices was associated with poorer family functioning and higher rates of aggression and substance abuse for children, while the lack of parent acculturation to American culture was associated with lower levels of aggressive behavior for children. The results are discussed in ads from Android apps using Flurry? I have an app that monetizes its advertising via Flurry. In the Flurry dashboard, it says "My Pixels" - however, there is no way to actually see what these pixels are, such as what the number is for my advertising.

The screenshot below is an

XMLHttpRequest response from jQuery AJAX? I'm having a problem understanding how the responseXML.responseText works in my AJAX call. I'm using jqXHR object in jQuery, and thus this.responseText to fetch the responseText of the XMLHttpRequest object.

var request = new XMLHttpRequest();
request.open('GET', url, true);
request.send(); //var value = request.responseX 648931e174
